Gravedigger Hits
At "Pig Woman"

Smith would not admit that the "pig woman" had seen him near the murder scene on the night before her call, nor would he divulge any information concerning the crime that Mrs. Gibson might have given him.

"I know more, but I'm not going to tell now," was his answer when pressed for further details of his conversation with Mrs. Gibson.

In their investigation of Mrs. Gibson's life, the defense detectives are seeking to establish the parentage of a child about four years old whom the "pig woman" claims as her own.

If Mrs. Gibson gave birth to the child, Dr. J. H. Cooper of East Millstone, who attended her four and five years ago, knew nothing of it, he told the GRAPHIC several weeks ago. He further declared that he remembered when the baby appeared at the Gibson home.

In connection with the defense's investigation of the child's parentage, state investigators announced Friday that William Whittager, a New Brunswick man who once worked for Mrs. Gibson, had been approached by a man answering the description of a defense detective.

This detective, according to Whittager's affidavit, sought to have him admit that he was the father of the little girl.

The date of the first trial, probably that of Willie Stevens, has not been set yet. Special Prosecutor Alexander W. Simpson will appear before Supreme Court Justice Chas. W. Parker on Wednesday in Somerville and ask for separate trials for the accused. The prosecutor's move will be opposed by defense counsel.
